Policy. Mental Health America (MHA) believes that treating the whole person through the integration of behavioral health and general medical healthcare can save lives, reduce negative health outcomes, facilitate quality care, and promote efficiency and cost savings.. Behavioral health has historically been authorized, structured, researched, financed and regulated differently than general ...This aim is being pursued through the new care models, STPs and the evolution of some STPs into integrated care systems. These developments hold out the promise of a different way of working in the NHS with an emphasis on places, populations and systems. Leadership in integrated care systems (ICSs) Report prepared for the NHS Leadership Academy. Future of care No 9 – November 2018 . This Future of Care paper, aimed at chief executives, directors and senior managers from the NHS, local authorities, housing organisations and voluntary and community sector, is based on findings from interviews with systems leaders and a review of the literature. Integrated care is a team based model of care with innovation based on the blending of numerous provider disciplines' expertise to treat a shared population through a collaborative treatment plan with clearly defined outcomes. The patient and family play vital roles as members of the team providing input on personalized health outcomes and preferences in treatment approach.
